MANSION'S SHORTER
FRENCH AND ENGLISH DICTIONARY

Part Two

PREFACE

THE publication of this volume completes the Shorter French and English Dictionary, and in presenting it to the public the publishers wish to pay a tribute to its late Editor, Mr J. E. Mansion, who, for nearly twenty-five years, devoted his unremitting labour and great intellectual gifts to the compilation first of the Standard French and English Dictionary and later of this Shorter French and English Dictionary—an abridged edition of the parent work. Although he was denied the satisfaction of seeing this last volume in book form, the publishers wish to put on record here that the work is his, the whole of the manuscript having been reviewed and passed by him before his death. The subsequent routine operation of seeing it through to press has been carried out by the staff who worked under him for many years, and whose one consideration has been to reduce the volume exactly as he would have had it.

The plan and general arrangement of this Shorter Dictionary remain substantially the same as in the Standard Dictionary, but for the benefit of those who have not access to the larger work the following explanations are given:

- (1) Adverbs ending in -ly are entered at the end of the adjectives from which they are formed, and hence are not always in their strict alphabetical position.
E.g., tardily is under tardy, and not before tardiness.
- (2) TREATMENT OF VERBS. First the simple verb is dealt with, and then follow in the same paragraph the various compound forms (give in, give up, etc.), each with its past participle, present participle and gerund (if these require treatment). Then come the past participle and -ing forms of the simple verb, and lastly any hyphenated compounds of the simple verb.
E.g., to break; . . . to break down, break-down, s., broken down, adj.; . . . to break up, break-up, s., breaking up; broken, adj., -ly, adv., broken-backed, etc.; breaking, s., breaking-point; break-neck.

Each of these sub-entries is printed in heavy black type to enable the reader's eye to catch the required word with the minimum of difficulty.

- (3) Hyphenated words of types other than those illustrated under (2) are entered at the end of the paragraph dealing with the first element, while those compounds written in one word without the hyphen have a separate entry in their correct alphabetical place.

E.g., duck-pond, duck-shooting, etc., appear at the end of duck, while duckweed is entered after duckling.

Frequently, the question of hyphen or no hyphen is a moot point, and in these cases the form used in the Shorter Oxford Dictionary has been adopted.

REPRESENTATION OF THE PRONUNCIATION

THE notation adopted in this second part of the Shorter Dictionary is that of the International Phonetic Association, with the following modifications: the symbol [æ] is replaced by [a]; [o] appears only in the group [ou] or in foreign words; 'obscure' a and o are represented by [a], [o]; 'mute' r is represented by [r].

The stress is indicated by an accent preceding the stressed syllable: abbey ['abi] aberration [abo'rei(ə)n].
